

Harvey Danger

Little By Little...

“Harvey Danger are too smart to die.”
– Spin

“Get past the tags other people put on Harvey Danger.”
– Pitchforkmedia.com

We are proud to announce the third full-length by Seattle's Harvey Danger. Little By Little... marks the end of the band's studio hiatus after one of the most dramatic whirlwind success stories of the late '90s. Most listeners will be familiar with HD's gold-selling debut LP, Where Have All The Merrymakers Gone? (Slash/London), which spawned the #1 single and MTV/alt rock radio perennial “Flagpole Sitta.” Many may also remember the much-loved, if little-heard cult follow-up, King James Version (London-Sire). Little By Little... is the sound of a radically transformed band.

The distorted energy of the original incarnation has been replaced by a classic pop sensibility—a fuller, more piano-driven sound in place of the caustic alt-garage style that characterized their debut. (Don't worry, it still rocks.) The new stuff is a bit more Coldplay than Green Day, perhaps, but neither comparison does justice to the intelligent lyrics and startling melodies of Harvey Danger. Little By Little... is a testament to the band's renewed desire to make music with one another after a topsy-turvy 12-year ride through the life of a band. The result is the best work of their career. (Key songs: “Wine, Women & Song,” “Cream & Bastards Rise,” “Little Round Mirrors,” “Happiness Writes White”)
